

BoE cuts, softer sterling, US payrolls today

The main focus for markets yesterday in terms of scheduled macro events was the first Bank of England policy setting meeting of 2025. The BoE cut rates by 25bps to 4.50%. The 25bps rate cut was in line with market expectations.

However, the voting breakdown prompted a reaction on UK/sterling markets. The vote split was 7:2, with the two dissenters preferring a 50bps cut. Even more noteworthy was the fact that one of these was Catherine Mann, who was previously regarded as being 'hawkish' on interest rates. Overall though, looking through the noise generated by the vote split, the clear message from the BoE is for a "gradual" and "careful" approach to additional policy easing.

In terms of the aforementioned market reaction, UK futures contracts softened by around 10bps in the immediate aftermath of the BoE policy announcement/minutes. The market is now attaching a higher probability that UK official rates will fall below 4% by the end of this year.

On the currency front, sterling found itself on the defensive following the BoE meeting, giving up some ground to both the dollar and the euro. In level terms, GDP/USD opens this morning in the lower end of the $1.24-1.25 band. EUR/GBP is trading in and around the midpoint of 83-84p. Elsewhere, EUR/USD continues to operate in the upper half of $1.03-1.04.

Ahead today, there is some event risk for the dollar with the market spotlight shifting to the US macro diary. The US schedule features a raft of labour market updates for January, including the always eagerly anticipated payrolls number.
