

Quiet start to the week

There was a mixed tone to investor sentiment yesterday, amid a relatively quiet start to the week on financial markets. On equity markets, the Euro Stoxx 50 lost 0.4%. Meantime, at the closing bell on Wall Street, the S&P 500 was up 0.2%.

In terms of fixed income, sovereign yields moved higher across the board, reversing some of the significant declines seen last week. US Treasury yields rose by 4-6bps along the curve. However, the 10-year US yield is currently at 4.65%, well below its peak above 5% at the end of October. Elsewhere, German Bund and UK Gilt yields were 4-9bps higher, with the moves most pronounced at the long-end of the curve.

Currency-wise, the main FX pairs operated in narrow ranges. This was somewhat unsurprising given the lack of any top tier data releases yesterday. Of the limited moves to register, the dollar and the yen were slightly softer during the European session. However, overnight, the greenback recouped its losses, and gained the ascendancy, as markets reduced the amount of rate cuts priced-in for next year in the US by circa 10bps.

In level terms, EUR/USD opens this morning just below $1.07. GBP/USD is operating in the bottom half of $1.23-1.24. Elsewhere, EUR/GBP remains within the upper half of 86-87p. USD/JPY is above ¥150, while EUR/JPY is just below ¥161.

Turning to today, there is another sparse data schedule on both sides of the Atlantic. Eurozone producer price inflation for September will be the only release of note. However, barring any surprises, it is unlikely to impact the euro. Remarks from a number of Fed officials, though, could influence the dollar today.
