

Marginally firmer tone to the dollar

There was a cautious mood on markets at the start of the week, as investors continued to assess Friday's US Supreme Court ruling and subsequent announcements from President Trump regarding a new global tariff rate of 10-15%. Against that backdrop, the S&P 500 declined by 1.0%. Elsewhere, the Euro Stoxx 50 edged 0.3% lower. Meantime benchmark sovereign bond yields fell by 2-6bps in the US, Eurozone and the UK.

On the data front, the calendar was quite sparse yesterday. The only release of note, the German Ifo, improved and printed a touch above the consensus in February (88.6 vs. 88.4 f'cast). However, the data had no discernible impact on the euro yesterday.

Currency-wise, the main pairs were largely range bound. Of the muted moves to register, the dollar was in the ascendancy. However, the greenback handed back most of its initial gains before the European close, amid remarks from Fed Governor Waller, who noted that conditions in the US labour market remain fragile. Overnight though, the dollar was on the front foot once more. It has gained circa 0.2-0.4% versus the euro, sterling and yen in the past 24 hours.

In level terms, the marginally firmer tone to the dollar is evidenced by EUR/USD opening this morning back under the $1.18 threshold. GBP/USD is changing hands down below the $1.35 handle. Elsewhere, EUR/GBP remains in the lower half of the 87-88p corridor. USD/JPY is above the ¥155 mark.

Turning to the day ahead, the data schedule is quiet once again. The highlight today will be the Conference Board measure of US consumer confidence for February. A modest improvement from a very low level is forecast. Meanwhile, remarks from Governor Bailey and other members of the BoE Monetary Policy Committee at the UK Treasury Select Committee, will also warrant attention.
