

EUR/USD back below $1.08

There was a notable 'risk on' tone to investor sentiment on Wall Street yesterday. After managing to post its first weekly gain (albeit a modest 0.5%) last week after four negative weeks, the firming in risk appetite gathered momentum yesterday. At the closing bell last night, the S&P 500 was 1.8% higher on the day.

Investors appeared to take comfort from recent somewhat conciliatory rhetoric from President Trump in relation to tariffs. Meanwhile, the main US data release yesterday surprised to the upside of expectations, which in turn eased concerns regarding the US economic outlook. The flash reading for the US Composite PMI for March came in ahead of forecasts on the back of a strong performance from the services sector.

On the currency front, against the backdrop of positive newsflow regarding the US economy, the dollar managed to register some gains. At the same time, the softer tone to the euro carried over from last week.

In level terms, the combination of a firmer dollar/softer euro saw the EUR/USD pair drop back below the $1.08 threshold. Meantime, EUR/GBP edged lower towards the midpoint of 83-84p. Elsewhere, amid the dollar's upward momentum on the exchanges, GBP/USD traded down nearer to the $1.29 mark.

Looking ahead to today's calendar, the main release from the Eurozone of note is the German Ifo survey of business sentiment for March. Across the Atlantic, the key highlight from a busy US macro diary will be the Conference Board measure of US consumer confidence for March.
