

Markets cautiously optimistic for now

There was a cautious optimism on markets yesterday that the war in the Middle East may be drawing to an end. This was despite continued military attacks from Israel and Iran, as well as hawkish remarks from both the US and Iranian administrations. Meanwhile, overnight reports that the International Energy Agency (IEA) will release a record number of oil reserves also helped move Brent crude prices lower. It is currently back below $90 per barrel. Elsewhere, European natural gas prices declined sharply yesterday, to circa €49 per MWh.

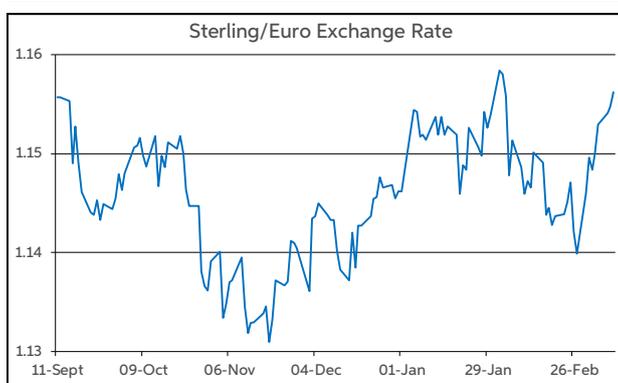

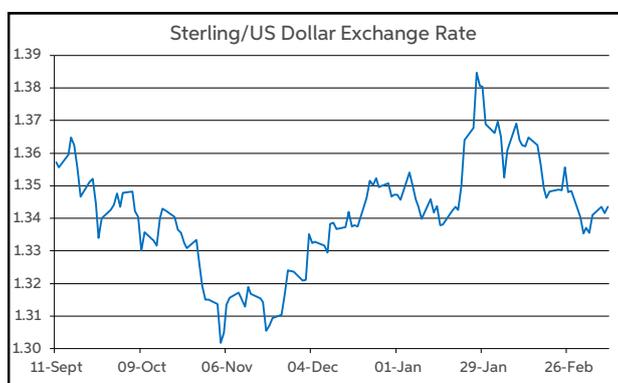

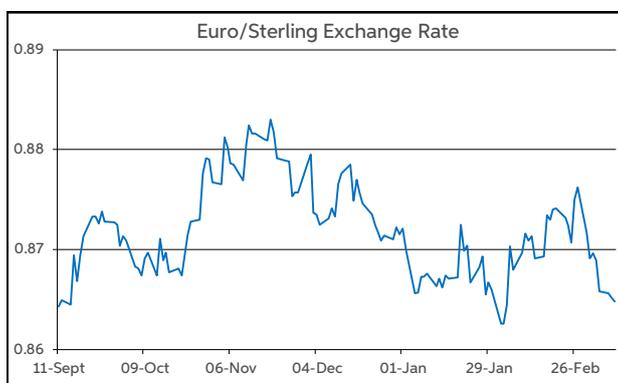

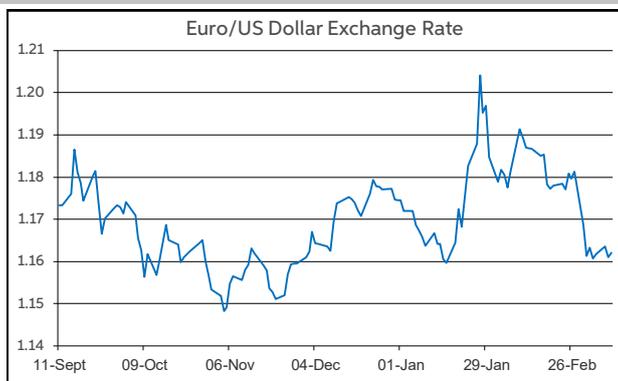

Against that backdrop, equity markets moved higher on both sides of the Atlantic. The Euro Stoxx 50 gained 2.7%, supported in part by tailwinds following President Trump's remarks on Monday, indicating the war would be over soon. The S&P 500 slumped at the close though, to register a modest 0.2% fall. In terms of fixed income, German bund yields fell by 1-3bps, while UK Gilt yields moved 5-10bps lower. US Treasury yields were little changed.

Currency-wise, the main pairs remained confined to very narrow ranges. Of the limited moves to note, the euro was holding a slightly firmer tone throughout the European session. However, the single currency handed back its gains overnight.

In level terms, this sees EUR/USD open this morning in the lower half of the $1.16-1.17 corridor once again. GBP/USD is in the bottom half of the $1.34-1.35 trading band. Meantime, EUR/GBP is at the midpoint of 86-87p. USD/JPY is operating north of the ¥158 handle.

Turning to the day ahead, the focus will remain on the Middle East, as markets look for any signs that the war is winding down, amid continued attacks once again overnight. Data-wise, US CPI inflation for February will warrant some attention. Both the headline and core rates are projected to remain at 2.4% and 2.5%, respectively.
