

Spotlight on US inflation today

There was some modest improvement in investor sentiment yesterday. This was without any obvious catalyst, although it came after a period of risk aversion on markets last week that had carried over into Monday's trading. The moderate firming in risk appetite was evident in the main equity indices managing to post some slight gains on the day.

The action on bond markets saw yields generally lower. Some commentators attributed this to a re-assessment of risk with the view that markets may have sold off 'too far too fast'. The ten-year US Treasury yield fell by 4bps and in the process dropped back below the 3% threshold. However, US front end rates held steady amid on-going hawkish Fed rhetoric resulting in a flattening of the Treasury yield curve.

On the currency front, the action has been largely uneventful over the past 24 hours. The euro has shown no major reaction to some ECB policy makers noting that a rate hike is likely to occur sooner rather than later in Q3. Of the limited action to register, the dollar regained some ground after holding a modestly softer tone the previous day.

In level terms, this is reflected in EUR/USD edging back down into the lower half of the $1.05-1.06 band and GBP/USD trading back below the midpoint of $1.23-1.24. Elsewhere, on currency markets, EUR/GBP has remained in a narrow corridor near to the halfway mark of 85-86p.

Ahead today, the main release of note is US CPI data for April. This will be looked to for signs that US inflation may have peaked. The consensus is for the headline rate to slow from 8.5% to 8.1%.
